After all, as one character points out, happiness is like water if "we're always trying to grab onto it, but it's always slipping through our fingers." What you will find, however, are some tenderly written stories about Nigerian women, sometimes in the US or in Nigeria, grappling with the demands made of them in a racist, sexist, and homophobic world.

In Happiness, Like Water, the language often conveys a sense of muted violence, of events that already occurred and left their mark, for example, here in the simple description of a blouse. Ezinne observes: the way the [dibia's] age spots blemished her skin like dark stars on the surface of a light-coloured sky.
