In "How Asia Works", Joe Studwell tells us how this seeming miracle was made possible: a three-step prescription of land reform, export-focused industrial policy, and financial repression. Japan, South Korea, Taiwan, and (most recently) mainland China have grown rich by following this formula; by ignoring it, fascinating thesis. As a young adult living in an affluent western society, (Australia) I am particularly interested in your explanation of land reform as a catalyst for development. It appears that the initial impetus for post-WWII land reform came from the United States rather than Japan, Taiwan etc.

Studwell shows how they largely got it right, by copying the 19th Century Prussian model. (In China and North Korea the agricultural boom ended when the Communists collectivised the farms.) In South East Asia land reform never took place, probably because events were not dramatic enough to force it to happen.
