De Vries and Schomerus (2017:333-340) explain that the collapse of the 2015 Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan (ARCSS) signed by the South Sudanese government, the international community and members of the opposition was a result of a lack of political goodwill by the government and the opposition, both of whom had more interest in the amount of power they would retain than in implementing the agreement (De Vries and Schomerus 2017:335).

South Sudan conflict from 2013 to 2018 - ACCORD

South Sudan was once a semi-independent region in Sudan, only recently gaining independence as a country in 2011, after a brutal civil war that lasted more than 25 years. The conflict in December 2013 reopened deeply-rooted political and ethnic tensions that hadn't yet been reconciled in the young country – and those divisions have continued to fuel ongoing clashes.

The relative calm can be attributed to the signing of the agreement by 12 of the parties engaged in the South Sudan conflict. The agreement is not stable - it was broken only hours after coming into effect, and there are continued clashes throughout the country (UN, 24 January 2018). However, groups engaged in clashes now need to justify their actions with regard to the ceasefire deal, so the threshold for opening fire is higher.

The history of South Sudan comprises the history of the territory of present-day South Sudan and the peoples inhabiting the region. South Sudan seceded from the Republic of Sudan in 2011. Geographically, South Sudan is not part of the Sudan region at all, forming as it does part of Sub-Saharan Africa. In modern terminology, it does, however, include parts of the East Sudanian savanna. Its inclusion in "Sudan" is due to the southward expansion of the Ottoman Khedivate of Egypt in the 19th century
