Probably the most famous parody of all is Cold Comfort Farm, by Stella Gibbons, which took the mickey out of the accounts of rural life by writers such as Mary Webb, D.H. Lawrence and Thomas Hardy, concentrating on sexual undercurrents, muddy fields and inheritances. However, I think the greatest gains are to be had writing poetic parodies.

A parody is "an imitation of the style of a particular writer, artist, or genre with deliberate exaggeration for comic effect." It is often used as a way of making fun of the news, politics, or public figures. Websites like The Onion and TV shows such as The Daily Show all employ parody for comedic effect. When Bart Baker or these websites create derivative work that imitates copyrighted content, they can be protected by the fact that their work is a parody of the original.

The "Poem of Job" like Bontsy Shvayg maintains a sharply critical line against pietistic worldview that a poet like Perets wished to address. The chapter mentions that to understand fully the "Poem of Job," one must see what the poet wished to turn inside out for purposes of parody, both in broad and small scale terms. Perets wanted the same thing on a whole array of Yiddish themes ...

The Art of Parody

The legalisms from the "Poem of Job" reflect the poet's innovation. The author produced a legal metaphor which will be considered largely without reference to the Dialogue/Appeal in the "Poem." The chapter raises one issue that is usually avoided—the question of God's righteousness. Though this was presented in the poem "according to the rules" as wholly conventional ...
