Language Of Autobiography Studies

Literary autobiography is the most highly developed form of this universal activity of self-promotion, a kind of writing practised in the west over many centuries.
In this major study of the western tradition, John Sturrock analyses the means by which more than twenty of the greatest literary autobiographers have gone about their task.

A Linguistic Autobiography. Because of myopic America's halfhearted attempt to teach foreign languages, only some Americans emerge from their educations with no more than tourist-level proficiency, if even that. Even fewer native English speakers develop fluency in another tongue and, even then, they do most of their reading and writing in their primary language rather than their acquired language.

Autobiography, the biography of oneself narrated by oneself. Autobiographical works can take many forms, from the intimate writings made during life that were not necessarily intended for publication (including letters, diaries, journals, memoirs, and reminiscences) to a formal book-length autobiography.

So while the whole watermelon thing is obviously really loaded, we're going to focus our attention on how language is used here. Coon was a racial slur similar to the N-word, but the way that it's being used here doesn't just refer to black people. It's being used to describe bad behavior, and in doing so, implying that acting like a black person is always bad behavior.
