In Moral Man and Immoral Society, Reinhold Niebuhr engages ethical thought on a multitude of levels—from national, racial, and economic—in an attempt to show that "a sharp distinction must be drawn between the moral and social behavior of individuals and of social groups." Furthermore, it is Niebuhr's intention to show, "that this distinction justifies and necessitates political policies which a purely individualistic ethic must always find embarrassing."

Review of Moral Man and Immoral Society by Reinhold —

Along with all of this Niebuhr noticed a terrible contrast between "moral man and immoral society." He observed a great distinction between the relatively decent, good behavior of man as an individual and man as society. His analysis of this contrast led him to the roots of the contradiction of human nature.
