Why Read the Classics? Quotes by Italo Calvino

12) A classic is a book that comes before other classics; but anyone who has read the others first, and then reads this one, instantly recognizes its place in the family tree. Finally, Calvino adds two points to explain why he thinks we should read old books, when we are so constantly overwhelmed “ by the avalanche of current events. ”

Italo Calvino Offers 14 Reasons We Should Read the Classics

Whether we're conscious of it or not, reading a book is never an isolated incident but part of a tradition. The classics are the milestones of our literary tradition. Some classics rise to prominence as the shining example of a movement (like realism or romanticism) or a genre (like science fiction or historical fiction). They sparked a literary trend because they did it first or they did it best. Other classics become so because they push the envelope.
